Kiteman in The Hunt 75 Looking for innovative ways to attract new talent? Check out Google's latest stunt, which was shown on NPR yesterday. Most likely to be on the hunt for new programmers and algorithm whistles, Google secretly hung banners outside subway stops in Cambridge, Massachusetts, and along Silicon Valley Highway 101. However, Google's signature stealth-style rather than advertising Google Engineers Wanted, marks an anonymous list of mysterious problems (the first 10-digit premiere found in successive e'com numbers - yes?) that leads a somewhat inspired website that home is a different equation. This equation leads to another equation on another site, which eventually takes a numerically driven to a special Google page asking for their resume. That's what I call driving talent. What other creative recruiting tools or tricks have you encountered? B. BlueGetty Images It's easy to go a little stir-crazy when you're stuck at home with kids, especially since they always seem energetic and fun. And now, with coronavirus restrictions, taking children home and away from any extracurricular activities, some of you parents may be looking for new ways to entertain their children and, let's be honest, run away from this excess energy. That's where these ideas of hunting a scavenger for children come in handy. With a little work and creativity on your part, your child can have fun for hours. With ideas for kids as young as three, these scavenger hunting ideas will keep kids entertained indoors, outdoors, and even online (yes, there are even virtual options!). Download printed goods for free, or buy themed hunts on the cheap on the Internet. Whichever option you end up with, you and the kids are sure to have a good time right at home. The ProBargainHunter blog dissected Amazon discount URLs to find great discounted items by department. A link to 75% of the camera and photo products below should give you an idea of the layout: You can specify a range for discounts like this: pct-of50-70. To sort the results by price, add a sorted price at the end. If you only want to list Amazon products (they will qualify for free shipping with Amazon Prime membership), then add EMATVDPKX0DER at the end. Once you get on the Amazon page, you can categorize the sidebar search to find exactly the product you're looking for. The post also discusses a few other useful links and tools to find good deals and popular items on Amazon, so if you're planning to make your holiday purchases super-cheap this month, you can check out ProBargainHunter tips and maybe create a few custom links yourself. Amazon shopping tips and hacks ProBargainHunter Marcio Madeira This season rustic separates bring a hint of bucolic to the city if you An easy, quick hike overlooking a waterfall in Colorado Springs, add scenic Helen Hunt Falls to her list. The namesake is not an actress, but rather Helen Hunt. It is named in memory of Helen Mary Hunt Jackson, who lived in the 1800s. She was an American poet, writer, and Activist for Native American Rights. After her death, she was buried in Colorado Springs. Helen Hunt Falls hike is about as easy as a waterfall hike can get. But since there are stone stairs to the top and the height is high, it is classified as easy to temper. It's short (about 0.1 miles), with additional superstructure trails for more adventure scenery. If you are in the Colorado Springs area, this hike is a quick and easy way to add some scenery and great photos to your day. Here's everything you need to know about Helen Hunt Falls' hike. Colorado has a total of 81 waterfalls with official names (plus countless unmarked waterfalls). Helen Hunt Falls is far from the most impressive of the bunch, but it's easy to get to, so visitors love it. Helen Hunt Falls is a 35-foot waterfall that can be reached within walking distance of the car park. Naturally, waterfalls in Colorado run more during the second part, so if you visit in the fall, it won't be as impressive as spring. If you can plan your visit after a big rain, the waterfall will be the most impressive. In winter, the view of a frozen waterfall is quite surreal. Trail: Because of its accessibility and proximity to Colorado Springs, this trail tends to get super busy, especially on weekends in the summer. If you can go early in the morning or on a weekday, you can have more peace and solitude to enjoy the water and views. The views from below are beautiful. At the top of the trail, you can look at the city through Cheyenne Canyon. For additional views and distances, you can hike less than a mile more up to Silver Cascade Falls or the eight miles total of the Lower Columbine Trail that runs down. The Helen Hunt Falls Trail is an out and back trail (not a loop). Climbing: It starts at 7,200 feet above sea level and is one-tenth of a mile away. Or, if you decide to extend the hike on the Columbine Trail, the round trip is eight miles with about 1,000-foot height gains. Difficulty: Easy to moderate, suitable for beginners, families and even children (although steps at the top of the waterfall may require extra hands for the little ones). If you decide to hike the Silver Cascade (upper waterfalls), the trail is still fairly easy and clearly marked. You will find benches along the way if you need to pause. Even if you can't hike, you can enjoy this waterfall from the parking lot and visitor center to Strasmore. This makes this waterfall accessible to everyone. Cost: Free and open all year round. Location: One hour and 45 minutes from Denver to Colorado Springs. The trail is located on Cheyenne Creek, in the Northern Cheyenne Canon Park. Find him at North Cheyenne Canyon Road. From the entrance to North Cheyenne Canon Park passing 2.5 miles up the canyon. You will see parking and waterfalls right from the road. Parking can accommodate about 30 cars. Car. This lot is full which is common in the summer, you can drive further up the canyon to find more parking. Road conditions: The road is open all year round. However, always check Colorado's traffic conditions before you go out on a trip, especially during the colder months. Always drive carefully through the canyon because it gets busy and there are often cyclists. Here are some other details to help you plan your trip to Helen Hunt Falls. Dogs are welcome on a leash. Be careful hiking in winter because the trails can be icy. There are scenic views from various points along the hike. It is also a popular trail for birds. If you take more Columbine Trail, wear good hiking boots because it can be slippery and has a greater height gain. The building called Bruin Inn was built at the foot of the waterfall in 1861, and later another small building was built. Although the fire eventually took out the hotel, the outbuildings survived and was turned into a visitor center. It was eventually demolished but then restored in 2012. The waterfalls were officially named Helen Hunt Falls in 1966. Here are some other highlights along Helen Hunt's Falls and things to look out for on your trip: Longer hikes: Take the four-mile Lower Columbine Trail from the bottom of Cheyenne Canyon to the waterfalls if you want a harder hike. (It starts next to the visitor center.) This hike follows a creek four miles up. Also, a hike to Silver Cascade Falls isn't quite a mile past Helen Hunt Falls: that trail is a little steeper, but still manageable for many abilities. The height increase for this extension is about 250 feet. Wildlife: Many wild animals live in this area. Beware of bears and mountain lions. Don't leave the trash around. Starsmore Visitor and Nature Centre: This is a visitor centre for Helen Hunt Falls, where you can find snacks, drinks, gifts and souvenirs. You can also learn more about nature in the area through exhibitions, talking to staff, history books, maps, videos and more. Ask about excursions and walks in nature. This center is only open in the summer. Pack a picnic: bring food and plan a scenic picnic with a view. Thank you for letting us know!
